Endodontics is often identified as one of the most technically demanding procedures in general dental practice, dealing as it does, with tooth pulp health surrounding the root.

Some dentists claim that the technical know-how required for complex root-canal treatment is not acknowledged by the NHS, which classes complex endodontic treatment under the same band as fillings.

A dentists’ questionnaire on website, bassettlaw.gov.uk put forward the following: ‘We are now target driven – we have to earn a certain number of UDAs per year. In the past we simply provided the treatment required and got paid for it. Now, we get the same UDAs if a patient needs one filling or six extractions, eight fillings and three root treatments. It is obvious that dentists have a disinclination to accept patients with dreadful mouths.

‘There should be a more flexible approach to UDAs and poor mouths should attract more. UDAs should be awarded in relation to the treatment provided.”

Dr Shiv Pabary, the principal of six practices across Newcastle and Gateshead, which have been established over 20 years, says the situation is complicated. He says: ‘With regard to endodontics, the way the contract is set up, it is assigned to Band 2. But to do treatment properly can take up to 90 minutes and be very demanding. I don’t know what the evidence is that dentists are opting for extractions in practice, but the current system definitely discourages dentists from saving teeth.

‘There is also a strong ethical dimension, because dentists should do what is in the patient’s best interest. A dental practitioner would have to strongly defend a decision to extract a tooth, if it were not in the patient’s best interests.

‘In our practices we went into a PDS contract early. I told my colleagues not to change their treatment plans or their way of thinking, because dentists are obliged to do what is clinically necessary.

‘For example, if there is a second or third molar from the back that is non-functional, one could consider extraction as a possible option. But if a patient needed three molar endodontic treatments, the dentist would only get...

About the speaker:
Jerry Watson is a general dental practitioner based near Stamford. Jerry is a well respected trainer and has worked with many companies and organisations to deliver training for dental teams; he is particularly interested in facilitating customer care and team work training events.

Delegates who attended the recent spring series of seminars made the following comments following their experience at the seminar: "uplifting", "looking forward to getting started with smartseal" and "it does as it says on the tin it will be amazing, I think it will and does".

Endodontics should be introduced, because dentists should be fairly remunerated for it. Endodontic instruments are all single-use, which also increases expenditure.

If a crown gets 12 UDAs, a molar root-canal treatment should get nine and an anterior tooth, at least six. That would encourage more dentists to do root treatment.

paid under Band 2 for 5 UDAs (patient charge £44.60) which could take nearly five hours, whereas it would be far quicker to extract the teeth. But ultimately, dentists are here to save teeth, not extract them.

Another point is that young, highly-trained dentists, who are not doing Endodontics because of the disincentive to the newly-qualified, also need to be encouraged to carry on because it’s good medicine and it’s good for secondary prevention.

Nick Patsias, vice-chairman of the London Federation of Local Dental Committees, thinks there are some ‘unfortunate perverse incentives’ in the new contract. He says: ‘The way the fees are set up, the DH is incentivising dentists in the direction of simpler treatments. Dentists are being financially encouraged to do easier treatments such as extractions rather than root-canal, fillings rather than bridges. NHS dentistry has been turned back half a century because of it.’

‘I wouldn’t like to say whether dentists are actually doing that, some could be and others are definitely not. But it is counter-productive that an NHS dentist receives the same fee for however many root canal treatments he carries out. The contract needs changing.

‘Another major perverse incentive is that the patient-charging structure encourages them to leave their treatment for as long as possible until they need a lot of work. This is the expense of the regular patient who pays the same fee for only one filling or crown. This, along with the nice guidelines, which recommends recalls of up to two-year intervals is giving the wrong message to patients and dentists alike. After decades of trying to get our patients to the dentist more regularly, now the message appears to be, Stay away, you will be better off!’

Dr Gurprem Singh Lidder, principal of two practices in Dunstable and Leighton Buzzard, says the UDA system needs to change but it was important to acknowledge technology’s positive impact. ‘I think dentists should receive more UDA accreditation for root-canal treatment, which is currently paid the same as fillings, but is far more complex and time-consuming. Three UDAs is rather paltry. Another band with more UDAs for canal work, because it needs to be acknowledged as an advanced restorative procedure that requires a high degree of skill.

‘The current system can put pressure on dentists to extract teeth, rather than restore them.’

However, if statistics do show more extractions, it cannot be ignored that this could be partly due to the new opportunities that have opened up because of implants. For example, a tooth of dubious prognosis, which previously one may have restored and warned the patient about its limited prognosis can now be extracted and replaced with a much longer-lasting, more predictable implant.

“We are lucky to be in a fairly affluent area here, so can make up the cost of Endodontics through private work with some of our patients. But in a poor area, where there is minimal private treatment, the cost of root-canal treatment cannot be made up, which could encourage more extractions.

‘Not acknowledging the complexity of endodontics devalues the work dentists do.’

Mark Pulford, commissioning dental lead for Heart of Birmingham Trust PCT, says the PCT does provide Endodontics. He adds: ‘We recognise that Endodontics is an issue, but having said that, this PCT is providing Endodontics. We will be working with our dentists including, and in particular, dentists with an interest in Endodontics, to see if we can support services in HOBT, through a clinical network approach involving High Street dentists and secondary dental care colleagues. This is in order that future contracting can be influenced by our dentists, now that we are more than two years into the new contract. Our work will include looking at contract values and we certainly will not be paying any less.’

An endodontics expert said endodontics and the NHS was a very delicate topic which needed attention from political, social and economic viewpoints.

He said community health covered the whole of society and implied the primary right of the ill individual to be helped and reintegrated back into society. He says:

‘Endodontics is a dental specialty, which covers the treatment of healthy or infected pulp and periapical diseases. Each diagnostic requires a different treatment approach.

The more advanced the disease, the higher the qualification requirements for the practitioner, the higher the material... and instrumental involvement, the higher the time demands and, of course, the financial implications.

Endodontic treatment of a multiple-rooted tooth, presenting a chronic apical periodontitis, may require between one and half to two and a half hours of clinical work. Financial remuneration as offered by the NHS cannot cover this.

The NHS recognises the need for differentiation and accordingly covers treatment costs for GDP and endodontic specialists within the funding available. As science advances, the previously allocated funding cannot continue to cover the costs, but one cannot blame the system for not providing funding for everything.

Offering the patient an up-to-date diagnosis and all available treatment options, including the coordination of specialist referral services, represents the optimum standard of NHS care.

more extractions, but it is appropriate, is one of the aims of the new system.

‘We need to start looking forwards, focusing on the massive change going on regarding the growth of prevention, the increased number of new dentists coming out of UK dental schools and the commitment made by the NHS to commission enough services to enable anyone who seeks NHS dental care to get it by April 2011 at the latest. There is a huge increase in preventive work, backed up by evidence.’

He said 'preventive toolkits' had been dispatched to every practice and there was a 153 per cent increase in fluoride-concentrated toothpaste, as well as evidence-based programmes using fluoride varnish.

The art of connection
You have to bond with your patients if you want them to say ‘yes’ to treatment. Author Ashley Latter offers some invaluable advice

You have all probably heard the saying: ‘People will only normally do business with people they like and can associate with’, and that the most important part of the sales process is the building up a relationship. I strongly believe this and would like to share a personal story with you to back up this case.

On a whim, during the recent property boom, I joined the many thousands and became a first-time property developer. I decided to offer finance to a builder-friend of mine, so he could buy a run-down property, develop it and then sell it on. It is in a good area and the deal fitted in with my risk taking. What I needed, however, was finance in with my risk taking. What I find in life that for every 100 purchases/transactions I make, about three to four per cent are memorable and enjoyable. The other 96 per cent are nothing special, or the service is not good and I do not enjoy it. So I am delighted to share one of the more enjoyable experiences.

Key points to learn
1. Spend time in preparation. Learn all about your patients, read their records and have staff meetings. Remember – proper preparation prevents poor performance.
2. Really focus on getting the customer to like you and ‘connect’ with the patient. It is only when you really connect that a transaction takes place.
3. Look the part. Nothing more to say here.
4. Once you have gained commitment, do everything possible to make the experience a great one. ‘Wow’ them at every opportunity, keep them updated with what is going on and of course, common sense here, thank them for your business.
5. Ring the patient at home afterwards and ask them how everything is going.

The meetings commence
Existing Bank arrived. There were two of them and they were nice and pleasant. They built rapport fairly well, although they were questioning me on what I did as a business. Twenty years as a customer, yet they did not know what I did for a living. They offered a really good scheme and I said that I would consider it over with my wife.

New Bank arrived on time. There was just one of them and he was called Brian. Brian spent the first few minutes asking me lots of questions about my business and my website, which he had visited the day before, and about some of the training I had delivered. We must have spent at least 20 minutes discussing my business and my life, and I was in my element.

What’s happened since
1. One of his associates came and collected the forms and all necessary paperwork within 24 hours.
2. I had regular telephone calls from his PA, Stephanie, every other day, informing me of the progress of the loan.
3. Once we had completed, I got a telephone call telling me the money was ready and available to spend.
4. A few days later I got a bunch of flowers thanking me for my business and for choosing New Bank.

It was harder to do business with New Bank, as I had to provide information that my existing bank already had, however it was a joy to do business with them.

You see, ‘ME’ is my favorite conversation. He asked me questions about what I required and presented some quotations he had already prepared on the basis of a quick telephone conversation we had had on the day before. You know what, I had already decided to do business with Brian and New Bank before I had seen the offer he was making to me. I was very impressed and I had probably decided in about five minutes. Why, because Brian had taken the trouble to find out all about me, before he came to see me and was genuinely interested. We also found several topics we were genuinely interested in football, cricket etc. We were connecting.
