News

Dental access improves

Access to NHS dental services has improved in the last six months, according to a recent patient survey.

The GP Patient Survey is a quarterly survey of GP adult patients, which is managed by Ipsos MORI on behalf of the Department of Health.

This is the first time that dental questions have been included in the survey. The survey carried out between January and March 2010 revealed that 92 per cent of people had been able to access NHS dental services in the last two years. The results also found that access to services has improved in recent months, with 95 per cent claiming they were able to arrange an appointment in the last three to six months.

Forty-one per cent of people had not tried to get an appointment with an NHS dentist in the last two years.

The most frequent reason for not trying for an NHS dental appointment in the previous two years was: ‘I stayed with my dentist when they moved from NHS to private’ which was mentioned by 21 per cent of adults. Eighteen per cent of people said: ‘I didn’t think I could get an NHS dental appointment’.

For 78 per cent of adults the last NHS appointment sought was for routine dentistry; 18 per cent were seeking an urgent appointment and two per cent didn’t remember the type of appointment. Eighty-one per cent of the most recent appointments sought were with the dental practice previously attended. North East Strategic Health Authority (SHA) had the largest percentage of the adult population seeking an NHS dental appointment in the last two years, at 66 per cent, whilst South Central SHA had the smallest, where 52 per cent sought an NHS appointment.

Employee wellbeing

Three quarters of organisations believe a dental plan enhances employee wellbeing, according to the 2010 Dental Benefits Survey by Denplan. The survey also found 54 per cent of respondents that are considering adding or removing benefits in 2010 were considering adding a dental plan. More than half (62 per cent) of the companies said that regularity of use is an important factor when choosing employee-paid benefits.

July 19-25, 2010

News in Brief

Dental access improves

Access to NHS dental services has improved in the last six months, according to a recent patient survey.

The GP Patient Survey is a quarterly survey of GP adult patients, which is managed by Ipsos MORI on behalf of the Department of Health.

This is the first time that dental questions have been included in the survey. The survey carried out between January and March 2010 revealed that 92 per cent of people had been able to access NHS dental services in the last two years. The results also found that access to services has improved in recent months, with 95 per cent claiming they were able to arrange an appointment in the last three to six months.

Forty-one per cent of people had not tried to get an appointment with an NHS dentist in the last two years.

The most frequent reason for not trying for an NHS dental appointment in the previous two years was: ‘I stayed with my dentist when they moved from NHS to private’ which was mentioned by 21 per cent of adults. Eighteen per cent of people said: ‘I didn’t think I could get an NHS dental appointment’.

For 78 per cent of adults the last NHS appointment sought was for routine dentistry; 18 per cent were seeking an urgent appointment and two per cent didn’t remember the type of appointment. Eighty-one per cent of the most recent appointments sought were with the dental practice previously attended. North East Strategic Health Authority (SHA) had the largest percentage of the adult population seeking an NHS dental appointment in the last two years, at 66 per cent, whilst South Central SHA had the smallest, where 52 per cent sought an NHS appointment.

Employee wellbeing

Three quarters of organisations believe a dental plan enhances employee wellbeing, according to the 2010 Dental Benefits Survey by Denplan. The survey also found 54 per cent of respondents that are considering adding or removing benefits in 2010 were considering adding a dental plan. More than half (62 per cent) of the companies said that regularity of use is an important factor when choosing employee-paid benefits.

www.dental-tribune.co.uk

Events

Oral Health Month

Colgate launches month-long public campaign

Licking a cricket bat

A look at Professor Lewis’ ISDH 2010 lecture

Useful tool

Dr Paul Jones discusses CBCT in Endodontic treatment

Get involved

Share your skills with Bridge2Aid

Endo Tribune

Useful tool

Dr Paul Jones discusses CBCT in Endodontic treatment

News

Dentist Colin Howell faces a second trial for allegedly assaulting female patients

A dentist who is standing trial for murdering his wife and his lover’s husband, has now also been charged with assaulting six of his female patients.

Colin Howell and his ex-lover Hazel Stewart were charged earlier this year with murdering his wife Lesley, 51, and Stewart’s husband, 51.

The victims’ bodies were found in a car filled with exhaust fumes at a garage behind a row of houses in Castlerock, Co Londonderry in May 1991.

A coroner originally ruled that Mrs Howell and RUC constable Trevor Buchanan had taken their own lives, but the case was reopened after new information was given to the police.

Howell, from Sea Road, Castlerock and Stewart, from Ballymena were charged more than £2,000 for each dental implant.

The next hearing in the case will be in September.

Murder trial dentist charged with assaulting female patients

Murder case takes bizarre twist as six patients now complain of indecent assault charges against dentist

A dentist who is standing trial for murdering his wife and his lover’s husband, has now also been charged with assaulting six of his female patients.

Colin Howell and his ex-lover Hazel Stewart were charged earlier this year with murdering his wife Lesley, 51, and Stewart’s husband, 51.

The victims’ bodies were found in a car filled with exhaust fumes at a garage behind a row of houses in Castlerock, Co Londonderry in May 1991.

A coroner originally ruled that Mrs Howell and RUC constable Trevor Buchanan had taken their own lives, but the case was reopened after new information was given to the police.

Howell, from Sea Road, Castlerock and Stewart, from Ballymena were charged more than £2,000 for each dental implant.

The next hearing in the case will be in September.

Murder trial dentist charged with assaulting female patients

Murder case takes bizarre twist as six patients now complain of indecent assault charges against dentist

A dentist who is standing trial for murdering his wife and his lover’s husband, has now also been charged with assaulting six of his female patients.

Colin Howell and his ex-lover Hazel Stewart were charged earlier this year with murdering his wife Lesley, 51, and Stewart’s husband, 51.

The victims’ bodies were found in a car filled with exhaust fumes at a garage behind a row of houses in Castlerock, Co Londonderry in May 1991.

A coroner originally ruled that Mrs Howell and RUC constable Trevor Buchanan had taken their own lives, but the case was reopened after new information was given to the police.

Howell, from Sea Road, Castlerock and Stewart, from Ballymena were charged more than £2,000 for each dental implant.

The next hearing in the case will be in September.

Murder trial dentist charged with assaulting female patients

Murder case takes bizarre twist as six patients now complain of indecent assault charges against dentist

A dentist who is standing trial for murdering his wife and his lover’s husband, has now also been charged with assaulting six of his female patients.

Colin Howell and his ex-lover Hazel Stewart were charged earlier this year with murdering his wife Lesley, 51, and Stewart’s husband, 51.

The victims’ bodies were found in a car filled with exhaust fumes at a garage behind a row of houses in Castlerock, Co Londonderry in May 1991.

A coroner originally ruled that Mrs Howell and RUC constable Trevor Buchanan had taken their own lives, but the case was reopened after new information was given to the police.

Howell, from Sea Road, Castlerock and Stewart, from Ballymena were charged more than £2,000 for each dental implant.

The next hearing in the case will be in September.

Murder trial dentist charged with assaulting female patients

Murder case takes bizarre twist as six patients now complain of indecent assault charges against dentist

A dentist who is standing trial for murdering his wife and his lover’s husband, has now also been charged with assaulting six of his female patients.

Colin Howell and his ex-lover Hazel Stewart were charged earlier this year with murdering his wife Lesley, 51, and Stewart’s husband, 51.

The victims’ bodies were found in a car filled with exhaust fumes at a garage behind a row of houses in Castlerock, Co Londonderry in May 1991.

A coroner originally ruled that Mrs Howell and RUC constable Trevor Buchanan had taken their own lives, but the case was reopened after new information was given to the police.

Howell, from Sea Road, Castlerock and Stewart, from Ballymena were charged more than £2,000 for each dental implant.

The next hearing in the case will be in September.

Murder trial dentist charged with assaulting female patients

Murder case takes bizarre twist as six patients now complain of indecent assault charges against dentist

A dentist who is standing trial for murdering his wife and his lover’s husband, has now also been charged with assaulting six of his female patients.

Colin Howell and his ex-lover Hazel Stewart were charged earlier this year with murdering his wife Lesley, 51, and Stewart’s husband, 51.

The victims’ bodies were found in a car filled with exhaust fumes at a garage behind a row of houses in Castlerock, Co Londonderry in May 1991.

A coroner originally ruled that Mrs Howell and RUC constable Trevor Buchanan had taken their own lives, but the case was reopened after new information was given to the police.

Howell, from Sea Road, Castlerock and Stewart, from Ballymena were charged more than £2,000 for each dental implant.

The next hearing in the case will be in September.